Founder and Managing Partner of aergon AG

Dr. Thomas Gartenmann marvels at the joy that psychological insights, presence and trust-based connections can bring. He coaches executives and supports them to (re)discover their purpose and their zest for life. He is the Founder and Managing Partner of aergon ag, a consulting boutique offering support in team- and leadership development, scaling culture transformations, and executive coaching.

He started his working life as a research and teaching assistant in chemistry before joining the business world, where he enjoyed a career of 17 years with the Boston Consulting Group. He has a doctorate in Chemistry and Education from the University of Zurich, and an MBA from INSEAD. He is certified as a systemic coach and completed several leadership programs and courses on cognitive and behavioral psychology in the US and UK. His current research focus is on developmental trauma and trauma-informed culture programs. His recent book “The Emperor’s Cupboard – More clarity and impact for business leaders through Western psychology and Eastern wisdom” was published in English and German. Other sources of inspiration are travelling with his family, meditation and singing in a choir.
